Shorter absences

Over the past year our early intervention supported employers long term absent employees by enabling them on average to return to work 6 weeks before the end of the deferred period.

The deferred period is the time between an employee being first absent to when we'd begin paying a regular benefit amount for eligible claims and is typically 26 weeks.

Cost savings

Our fully funded treatment, where appropriate, could save businesses on average £575 in Statutory Sick Pay (SSP), per employee who is long term absent.

Compared to those businesses whose employees received SSP for the full typical 26 week deferred period.

We also supported long term absent employees with mental health conditions, enabling them, on average, to return to work 8 weeks before the deferred period.

Therefore, where appropriate, our fully funded treatment could save your business on average £766 in SSP, per employee who is long term absent because of their mental health.

Compared to those businesses whose employees received SSP for the full typical 26 week deferred period.
